"Topsy-Turvy: The American Economy in Crisis--A Long View "

Walter Licht

October 12, 2009

7:00 pm—Scandinavian Cultural Center

Walter Licht is Walter H. Annenberg Professor of History at the University of Pennsylvania. The United States emerged after World War II economically dominant, dynamic, and prosperous-- and remains so. Yet, from the late 1940s through the first decade of this century, successive crises and instability have also marked the economic life of the country. In the Fifth Annual Dale E. Benson Lecture in Business and Economic History, Walter Licht, Annenberg Professor of History at the University of Pennsylvania and student of American economic and labor history, will place our current economic meltdown in historical perspective, investigating whether the causes are episodic or enduring and structural. Professor Licht's talk draws from his forthcoming book, /American Capitalisms: The U.S. Economy in Historic Global Perspective.
