

Each symbol in the Braille code is represented by a rectangular arrangement of six dots, each of which may be raised or flat against a smooth background. Given that at least one of the six dots must be raised, how many symbols can be represented in Braille code? Is this a reasonable number?