

SPRING 2016 FYEP 190 Course Sections

Courses are listed by their cross-listed departmental course; in some instances, a course may stand alone as a FYEP 190 course only (see NURS 190).

ANTH 332: Prehistory of North America

This course provides an overview of the major events in precontact North America with a focus on hands-on experience with the field and lab methods that archaeologists use to investigate settlement patterns—when, where, and how people colonize, migrate, and move around landscapes. Topics will include the original colonization of North America after the Ice Age, native peoples of the Northwest Coast and Great Basin, and Euroamerican Contact. We will also explore the ways that archaeologists analyze data and write about and share their narratives with other researchers and contemporary communities.

BUSA 201-01: Intro to Business in the Global Environment

Understanding business in the global marketplace and how functions and applications contribute to mission. Introduction to domestic and global economic, competitive, social, cultural, political and legal environments of the business enterprise, and how to integrate ethical and socially responsible behavior in the business environment. Opportunity to reflect on professional goals and explore potential careers in business.

BUSA 201-02: Intro to Business in the Global Environment

Understanding business in the global marketplace and how functions and applications contribute to mission. Introduction to domestic and global economic, competitive, social, cultural, political and legal environments of the business enterprise, and how to integrate ethical and socially responsible behavior in the business environment. Opportunity to reflect on professional goals and explore potential careers in business.

ECON 101-01: Principles of Microeconomics

Introduces the study of economic decision making by firms and individuals. Economic tools and concepts such as markets, supply and demand, and efficiency applied to contemporary issues. Students cannot take both ECON 101 and 111 for credit.

ECON 101-02: Principles of Microeconomics

Introduces the study of economic decision making by firms and individuals. Economic tools and concepts such as markets, supply and demand, and efficiency applied to contemporary issues. Students cannot take both ECON 101 and 111 for credit.

ENGL 217-02: Topics in Literature

This course is a linked course. Its enrollment is limited.

Topic: Coming of Age on the Border.

This course continues your immersion in the literature of borderlands by taking you further south to read and write about the stories of immigrants from Central and South America and the Caribbean. Our focal point will be the experiences of young adults from Mexico, Colombia, Puerto Rico, Dominican Republic, Panama, among other countries, coming of age in the USofA. Just like the texts you read in the fall, our texts confront crucial questions—What is home? What is nation? What is citizenship? We will continue to inquire how and why communities north and south of the border are united by language, culture, music and literature, yet divided by nationality, economy, policy, police-military force, and (in many places) a physical wall, as you did with Prof. Call. Since this is a literature course, we will also focus on how poetry, narrative, essay, and memoir are created and to what effect; you will do research on the intersections of history, politics, and literature. Throughout the semester you will write critical analyses of the readings and watch films, as well as venturing into some creative writing of your own!

GEOS 106-01: Geology of National Parks

Study of the significant geologic features, processes, and history as illustrated by selected National Parks. Relationship between human history and geology and the impact of geology on our lives will be included.

HIST 215-01: Modern World History

This course is a companion course for WRIT 101: Global Human Rights, Millennium Development Goals. After studying in Fall 2015 the current issues addressed by the MDGs, such as poverty, education, and women's rights; students will explore the global historical movements leading to these current problems. These global historical movements include such things as colonialism, imperialism, industrialization, and westernization.

HIST 288-02: Introduction to the Study of History

Topic: Telling Stories about the Past: An Introduction to the Study of History.

What is history and why study it? This course is an introduction to the study of history and how historians think about, analyze, and interpret the past. It explores history as a way of thinking and the various methods historians use to tell stories about the past, including political, social, economic, cultural, and gender history approaches. After reading widely from the various approaches to historical inquiry, the class will focus on the multitude of ways to tell the story of one event: the French Revolution.

MUSI 101-01: Introduction to Music

Through hands-on musical play, listening to recordings and attending concerts, students will gain an understanding of the ways composers create works in the "classical" tradition. No previous musical experience required.

NURS 190-01: Inquiry Seminar

Introduction to the idea of profession and nursing with emphasis on critical thinking and writing as core skills for its membership. Extensive reading and writing required with focus on process, as well as product.

RELI 223-01: American Church History

Topic: Christianity and Gender in American History.

Students in this FYEP 190 course will build on the work they did in FYEP/WRIT 101 (Femininity in Context) by examining the historical construction of gender norms among American Christians. Students will write a series of essays analyzing the role of Christians in the first wave of American feminism, the effect of second-wave feminism on evangelical Christianity, and the development of masculine gender norms among American Christians. NOTE: This is a writing-intensive FYEP 190 course, and enrollment is limited to students who took FYEP/WRIT 101 "Femininity in Context."

SCAN 190-01: TBA

A four-credit seminar to introduce students to the methods and topics of study within a particular academic discipline or field. Students practice the academic skills that are at the center of the General Education Program.

SOCI 101-02: Introduction to Sociology

An introduction to the discipline of sociology. Features an analysis of contemporary American society with emphasis on the interconnections of race, class, and gender. Sociological concepts include socialization, social roles, stereotypes, power, and stratification.

SOCW 101-01: Introduction to Social Work

An introduction to human need and the field of social work. Provides an overview of services, models of service delivery, and professional social work values. Students visit agency settings and meet with social work practitioners. A volunteer experience in the field is a required component of this seminar-style course.