A Roundtable Discussion

In April Icelandic voters threw out the center-left Social Democratic Alliance that had come to power in 2009, after the nation's devastating economic collapse, replacing them with the center-right Independence and Progressive Parties. In September Norwegian voters ousted their center-left government, voting instead for the Conservative and right-wing populist Progress parties. Join PLU faculty in a roundtable discussion of these historic changes of direction, seen in larger Scandinavian and European contexts.
