PROGRAM OVERVIEW

This J-term program focuses on Oxford to survey the contested history of religion and politics. Oxford's rich history includes countless moments of church-state tension. We'll read about and visit sites where people fought for freedom from imperial Christianity, where early evangelicals registered their dissent against the established order, and where future prime ministers and other members of Parliament developed enduring arguments about religion and politics. We'll also visit major sites in London to see how church and state interact in the British capital. Grappling with the changing relationship between religion and politics will offer students new ways of thinking about contemporary issues involving church and state.

Throughout the program you will work on strengthening your writing skills and using your observations of contemporary Oxford to understand the legacies of the history we're studying. All program participants live, study, and cook together in houses in the vibrant, diverse city of Oxford.
